The new field of eight courts is laid at Kingston avenue, Crown and Montgomery ber of the club, is the architect of the new house, which has cost several thousand dollars. It is more commodious and pretentious than the old historic 'shack' which has served for nearly a quarter of a century. It is equipped with adequate tocker facilities and showers, with special quarters for the women players at the western end. About the building is a geven-foot porch, arranged to serve as a grandstand for the main court. The house has been made in sections, so as to be portable.

The old "shack," as it has been generally termed, has quite a history. It was moved from the old grounds at Kingston avenue and Bergen street about eight years ago, and, in spite of its limit.
